OR THE land's sake, pa," called out Mrs. Drusilla Gladden to her husand as he wiped his feet on a piece of earpet at the kitchen door, "I thought you'd never get in. Guess who sent me letter. You'd never think in a month of Sundays. It's from Devah Bland-Cousin Devah."

Pa gave a smile of interest and rubbed

"Well, I swan, now! And what has Davy got to say for himself?" "He's coming to Ohio to visit. He'll be here next week. What do you think of that?"

Pa pulled off his boots contentedly. "X won't be sorry to see Davy. We wer in school together. What say? Is Le doing well?"

"Doing well, but his wife's dead; been dead two year or more. I bet you a great deal, pa, he's on the warpath. And to think Angeline Culver's visiting around here just now, and she's a widder. Pa, it looks like the 'pintin's of Providence, don't it?"

Mrs. Gladden smiled benignly on her kusband and he on her. They were in love with each other, and had been for 29 years.
"It truly does," replied pa, "it truly does. Jest think how those two courted over three years, wasn't it? I hold the split was all Angeline's folks' fault, wasn't it? That old man Porter never stayed anywhere and got a streak to move to Indiana. Her ma wouldn't let her stay here, and that made Devy propcriy mad. They kep' it up awhile writin', then Devy went out farther west and married himself to a strange woman. After awhile Angeline gets married. First we hears her pardner's gone and she's a likely widow, visitin' round. Then we gets a letter sayin' Devy's partner has been departed two years, an' he's comin' visitin'. Now don't that beat all?"

"How plain you've made it, pa," beamed Mrs. Drusilla. "It sounds like them story papers. You ort to have been a writer for one. I often thought that. My, ain't it plum interesting? I don't want to miss none of it, do you? How can we fix it?"

Pa was so appreciative of his wife's praise be tilted back in the rocker and gave the matter solemn thought. "I calkilate we kin have all this to ourselves," he began, "of you kin hold out 'gainst mentionin' Devy's comin'. It will be hard work for ye, Drusilly, but it's the only way. Do you think you ida hold that news over prayer meetin' and Sunday? I tell you what," he went on, excitedly, "we can just have the whole think happen right here, meetin' an' all, if you don't tell."

Mrs. Gladden's pleasant face fell.
"I wonder if it'll be fair not to tell the rest of the folks," she began. "You see, Devy'll be expecting a big welcome."

Asahel Gladden rose up in his socks. "Drusilly, I have jest set my heart on menagin' the whole thing. Don't you disappoint me. I never had so much chance as this in all my mortal life. I always wanted to do sech directin' and managin', and don't you disappoint

"What'll folks say when they find we held that news?" asked his wife, much impressed, but giving up as usual.

"They'll say you've come to years of discretion; though I don't want to hurt your feelings, Drusilly. You can take it all out fixin' up the spare room and Marindy's room. It air lucky Angeline hain't been down here yet-another elear 'pintin'. Now hurry up dinner, and write Devy a letter tellin' him he must come right here, an' we won't take as for an answer. I'll hitch up the cutter an' we'll go over to town an' engage Angeline for the whole endurin' week."

The two were as excited as children. The letter had to be strong enough to suit pa, and was the labor of an hour for Mrs. Gladden ere it suited him. Dinner over, they tucked themselves into a green sleigh and drove over to

"We'll stop on the way," said the small and rosy man. "I feel so anxious to get hold of Angeline." "Oh, you do?" questioned the wife, demurely. "Well, as our Marindy declares, her pa's younger'n anyone."

Angeline Culver-Angeline Porter that was—was visiting at old Dr. Normen's. She and Sissy Norman had al-ways been close friends. She came out to the sleigh to speak to Mrs. Gladden. She was quite dressy, and had on a pink house sack trimmed with white lace. She had tied a little white fascinator pa spent the happiest week of his life getting ready for that couple to be reunited. It never struck his warm and amiss. He piled up special wood for the parlor, he hovered around the two bedrooms, he actually had his finger in every pie and cake baked. He went to the village store alone once or twice, and after the last visit, wore an air of the deepest mystery.

Pa went through an expressive pantomime behind her.

Awhile later he was stamping off the falling snow on the platform of the station. A tall, bronzed man alighted from the express and pa met him, so eager he almost cried over him as he shook hands.

Alas! Alas! All pa's finesse and subtle phrases were forgotten. He was as nervous as a woman. Finally he reined in Dolly almost in sight of the
